

Do you love animals?

Do you love learning and studying?

A career as a Vet would enable you to treat sickness, disease and injury in all types of animals.

From horses, cows, pigs to dogs, cats and ferrets – you would be the expert in curing their illnesses and treating them when they are injured!

Some of the things you might do as a VET include:

- examine sick and injured animals
- identify the causes of disease
- treat animals by using drugs and/or surgical procedures
- immunize animals to prevent disease
- give advice to owners and breeders on animal health

You will be....

- motivated to work to improve animal health and wellbeing
- good at noticing symptoms
- good at problem solving
- good communication skills
- good at science and math
- achieving high grades at school
- good at managing a business

Education & Training

To become a veterinarian need a degree in Vet Science at university.

Your year 12 results will need to be very good with passes in English, a high math's, physics and/or chemistry.

Entry into courses is generally very competitive.

Additional Information

Australian Veterinary Association: www.ava.com.au

Veterinary Practitioners Registration Board: www.vetboard.gov.au

Australian Veterinary Association: www.ava.com.au